THE BOOK
Andy Warhol's Polaroids, collected in a book out this month from Taschen, were the Instagrams of his day.

THE LUGGAGE
I'm carrying the quintessentially British cases by Globe-Trotter for The Goring hotel in London.

In her debut column, the fashion editor chronicles a summer on the go, go, go

Summer raced by faster than you could say, “Are pool slides still OK to wear in public?” The season had me bouncing coast-to-coast and overseas, and in between gigs I’m always on the prowl for the best new places, things, and, obviously, shops.

My first stop was London to style our glorious cover shoot with Sienna Miller. How fun to dress up your friend while gossiping about motherhood, films, and the perfect fried egg (mostly the perfect fried egg). After the shoot, we went to the opening of the Soho House 76 Dean Street (5), where the fabulous people mingled over Pimm’s cocktails. I sat with a very bearded Rob Pattinson and Tom Sturridge, chatting about their next roles and casting hilarities.

When I arrived back home in New York, I met my savior, otherwise known as my makeup artist, Christyna Kay, at JFK, who used her wand during the car ride into the city to make me look human again just in time to film the Project Runway All Stars season five finale (airing in February). You’ve never known stress until you’ve tried applying liquid eyeliner while on the highway. Afterward, the MC crew and I headed over to the Elyx House (3)—Mickey Rourke’s former Meatpacking District apartment turned private bar—to celebrate the summer night away. Saturday linner (late lunch/dinner) was spent with my 15-month-old twin girls and the gorge Liv Tyler (4) and her baby son, Sailor. She got me hooked on the hot app MyEye. We used it to virtually live-stream our meal at The Standard!

My next stop was L.A., where I styled Target’s new fall plaid extravaganza commercial with Joel Kefali of Katy Perry music video fame. It took 10 long days on set, but I managed to sneak some time away to rub shoulders with Jay Z, Beyoncé, Cameron Diaz, Flea, and Shaun White over Mexican street food at Wes Lang’s exhibition at Milk Studios (2)—and to discover my new favorite L.A. chicken sanctuary, Cha Cha Chicken (1). As a self-proclaimed chicken connoisseur, I’m pretty sure that the path to nirvana is paved with jerk chicken. When you’re on a backbreaking shoot, you need some me time, which in my case was a 6 a.m. class with body stylist Nonna, Gisele Bündchen and Tom Brady’s Pilates teacher and a magician who cured my sciatica.

Later, I stopped for a lovely dinner at Chateau Marmont with my dear colleague and friend Catt Sadler of E! News. Topping off my summer was a much-needed trip to Manchester, U.K., to visit family. Wainwright Farm (6): home sweet home! @zannarassi
